Gerrit Smith's Letter to Thaddeus Stevens. DEAR SIR: You are reported in the New York Tribune as having recently said on the floor of Congress: "It is now held by one of the most liberal and enlightened gentlemen in the country (I mean Gerrit Smith) that we should even pay a portion of the damage inflicted on the rebels, and pay a portion of the rebel debt.

Of course, you do not mean that this is literalyou were able to construct from the letter of this proposition your figure (t speech is for you, not me, to explain. I am truly sorry that it is in your heart to hold up to ridicule my reasonable proposition. You are too old, and too intellectual, to be making such concession. to help her to an upward start from the depths to passion and prejudice. There are two reasons why the North should be glad to help the interest of slavery. In the light of such facts, it surely cannot be denied that the North made herself largely responsible for American slavery. But the war came of slavery, and the poverty and desolation of the South came of the war; and, hence, to the same degree that the North was responsible for slavery, is she responsible for the war, and for its ruinous results to the South.

You call my sympathy with the South, and my desire to have the North to help her, "sickly humanity." I call it simple honesty. If my neighbor and I join in getting each other drunk, and he in his frenzy goes to tearing down my house, and I in self-defence demolish his, I am not to disown his claim upon my sympathy. I am to feel that honesty requires me to help him rebuild.

Would to God that Congress were so just and wise as, at this very session, to lend fifty millions of dollars to the Confederate Statesto each of them so much of it as would be prohas suffered from the ravages of the war; the pity of the North for her, would win the heart of the South, and would thus produce a true and lasting peace between them. THE MYSTERY OF CHOLERA.—The present manifestations of cholera in this country do not tend to lessen the absolute mystery of the disease. Its grim secret seems past finding out. It is raging in central Kansas and in some parts of the Indian Territory with the same virulence that attend, its attacks on large and neglected cities. One would think that the primitive freshness of the earth, and sweetness of the air on the plains, would expel the epidemic, or at least lessen its deadliness. Out there no sewers or foul streets and slums breed contagion; no vaults spread miasma; no bone-boiling vats poison the air; no tenement houses nourish the pestilence. The frontiersman breathes a pure atmosphere, eats coarse wholesome food, and takes abundant physical exercise. The conditions of his daily life, according to popular theories, ought to render him proof against cholera. But he dies of it with as swift a decline as a pale faced child bred in a crowded alley. About all we know of cholera is that it is a great circumnavigator; and that it seems to be ravaging the plains now because it has got that far on its dreadful journey back to the Orient. - Cincinnati Com.
